ONE SMALL STEP TOWARD A DREAM AND A GOAL.

The moment I decided to study software analysis and development, I realized it wouldn't be an easy path and would present many challenges, since it's not really something I'm passionate about—I chose it because of a lack of opportunities and resources to excel in what I truly wanted to study. I started this program because it will open doors for me within the company where I currently work, and this decision will lead me to gain knowledge, recognition, and professional growth. In every process I undertake, I give it my all, as I consider myself a persevering person who achieves what I set out to do.

My motivation for enrolling in this program was that someone believed in my potential, since in the tasks I currently perform, I stand out for my organization, quick learning, and focus on what is asked of me; for that reason, I decided to take a step further and not stay in my comfort zone. If you were to have this conversation with the 17-year-old girl, she would tell you that she longs with all her heart to be a flight attendant—her passion lies in traveling, discovering, and learning about the culture of each country. Sometimes, opportunities open up not for what we desire, but for what brings us one step closer to stability.

Although we aren't where we'd like to be, we are where life and God have placed us, and if this is our present and future, we will enjoy it and be grateful for it so that everything flows smoothly and we achieve success.
